

WHY YOU SHOULD RENT YOUR FIRST BAND OR ORCHESTRA INSTRUMENT

by White House of Music

Should You Buy or Rent Your First Musical Instrument?

Welcome to the wonderful experience of making music! If this is the first time you or your student have needed a musical instrument, there are a few options you can explore as you begin your musical journey:

Should I Buy or Rent My First Band or Orchestra Instrument?

We absolutely recommend renting your first student instrument, and most music educators agree. It's not uncommon for students to switch from one instrument to another early in their journey. While a student may start with a trumpet or violin, they might find that they prefer to play the trombone or viola instead.

Another important benefit of renting an instrument is that it provides an opportunity for new students to use a better-quality instrument at an affordable price point. Students need quality instruments to learn properly. When using a low-quality instrument, it's impossible for a student to know whether it's them or their instrument that is preventing them from finding the sound and tone they are hoping to achieve.

An upside to renting an orchestra instrument versus buying is the ability to trade up to a larger instrument as your student progresses. Many string orchestra instruments are available in fractional sizes based on the size of a student. Additionally, renting can help students build equity in a full-sized instrument when they eventually outgrow their rental!

All Music Instrument Rentals Are Not Equal

It's important to be wary of organizations that rent heavily used or low-quality instruments. Ask your supplier if they vet the brands they use, and inquire about their testing, cleaning, and inspection procedures. If they cannot provide insight on these subjects, then you may want to steer clear.

White House of Music is a multigenerational business founded by music educators. Our mantra of "Making Music For Life" starts with student success. It is rewarding to see those same students return decades later as the parents of the next generation of musicians!
